The present invention relates generally to fluidic manipulations, and more specifically to the control of fluidic flows or streams to provide various fluidic effects, including controlled cooling, reaction, or heating of fluids. More specifically, the present invention relates to an apparatus for operating a plurality of plugs or valves on a common wall of a heat exchange channel which collectively control the flow of a fluid. The need to control the flow of a fluid stream in a specific or a desired manner for a variety of applications is well known. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,743,296, which is incorporated herein in its entirety by reference, teaches the use of a plenum defining a plurality of interconnected chamber for feeding and guiding a continuous fluid stream. A plurality of fans are disposed at one end of the plenum. The fans extract the continuous fluid stream and direct the extracted fluid stream into a plurality of recesses in the plenum to control the flow of the extracted fluid stream. One of the problems with this prior art construction is that the thermal energy is lost or dissipated as the extracted fluid is guided around the plenum. Thus, there is a need for an improved flow control apparatus which allows for optimal cooling of a fluid which is extracted from a continuous stream of fluid.
